LONDON, MAY 16.

BONNY Scot being lately haranguing on the late unhappy fracas in St. George's Fields, declared his vein (opinion) that if soldiers were punished for firing, they would not fire at all.——So much the better, quoth a Wag, that was by; 'tis Water that is wanted, not Fire—The flame is high enough already.

We are told the Earl of Bute will shortly set out for the South of France, for the benefit of his Lordship's health.

June 1. We hear that the following toast is now universally drank in the most polite companies in this metropolis, Champaigne to Mr. Wilkes, and real pain to his enemies.

Of all the absurdities which distinguish the present age, none surely can be greater than wearing laced cloaths, while our pockets are empty, and building houses like palaces, that the tenants may labour only to pay the rent. Our ancestors were contented with plain houses and apparel; but then their tables smoked with decent plenty, and they left good fortunes to their children.

June 2. We are credibly informed, that a certain patriotic nobleman, has declared his readiness to give a thousand guineas, towards raising a sum in support of the independence of the brave Corsicans.

We are assured, that at a late christening of the first and only son of a noble ——, of North-Britain, the butler having, pursuant to orders, made a cistern full of punch for the servants of all the nobility and gentry who were at the christening, his lady asked him how many gallons the cistern held? to which he answered, forty-five.—O Lord, (said the lady) that is very unlucky; pray put it into a larger vessel, and fill it up; which he accordingly did.

June 3. A physical wag of Westminster being told, with a sneer, by a Scotch acquaintance, that his friend Johnny Wilkes would pass his summer in the King's-bench prison, replied, I wonder at that; I expected he would soon have set out for the country, for to my knowledge he has long been booted and spurred.

We are informed, that the two great causes between Hamilton and Douglas, and between Fitz-Gerald and Penfold and others, are to be tried before the Lords next session of parliament, printed cases being already given out.

We are told, that subjects have in Scotland many testimonies of the greater spirit of freedom in its laws, than we have in England; for instance, no man can be arrested for debt in the first instance; no criminal can be loaded with irons until he convicted; no inflexible creditor can lock up an industrious member of the state for life, for upon the debtor's petition for relief upon his cessio bonorum, the Lords of Session can, and always do grant it.

It is said it is become fashionable in polite companies to drink a triple toast.—Pasli! Wilkes! Liberty!

We have this to add to the accounts formerly given of the island discovered by Capt. Wallace in the South Seas, that the cloth worn by the inhabitants resembles unbleached linen at a distance, but when nearer seems like paper; that it is wove and worn only by the men.

We are further informed, that Capt. Wallace tried to persuade some of the natives to come along with him, but that they refused to leave their friends and country. They were very sorry to lose the company of our people, and when the ship set sail they tried to stop her course with their canoes.

"Happy in having devoted our own existence to the liberties of our country, we find ourselves under an indispensible obligation, at our approaching dissolution, to express the warmest acknowledgments to a chief governor, in whose administration, and with whose assistance, we have been gratified with the noble opportunity of distinguishing ourselves from our predecessors, by leaving to posterity a monument of our disinterested love for the people we have the honour to represent, and an example that the happiness of our constituents, has in our own breasts taken place of every consideration.

"The many good laws obtained during this session of parliament, particularly those for the encouragement of tillage, and the support of our manufactures, and the fund which has so happily been established, for the reduction of our national debt, by the tax on absentees, will ever remain the most lasting, and honourable memorials of your Excellency's administration, and will in an eminent degree, distinguish your public as the most amiable manners adorn your Excellency's private character."

The late Andrew Millar, Esq; died in his 62d year. He had not long ago retired from business with an ample fortune, acquired by forty years unremitting industry and affiduity, in the course of which he published many great and useful works, which do honour to this country. His knowledge in his profession, which was extensive, joined to an enterprising spirit, often prompted him to undertake many large and hazardous publications, which in less capable hands, would have failed of success; and he was so liberal an encourager of men of genius, that he has justly been said to have raised the price of literature.

Mr. Wilkes, is said, might have been admitted to bail on Wednesday, but he declining it, was remanded back to the King's Bench prison, whither he went as privately as possible, through the court of Requests, down to the parliament-stairs, where he crossed the river in a boat, and was met on the other side by a carriage, which conveyed him privately to the above prison.

Extract of a letter from Paris, May 27.

"The actual parliament of Rennes has passed a resolution, to beseech the King to recall all the members of the ancient parliament, because that justice could not be administered in the province of Britanny for want of a sufficient number of Judges; but it is said that his Majesty greatly disapproves this resolution, and has answered, that he will absolutely make no alteration in his edict for the reduction of that parliament."

Yesterday the court of King's-Bench ordered the rules to be made absolute against the original publisher of the North Briton extraordinary, No. 4, and against another bookseller for having sold that paper. The rule against the original publisher of the North Briton, No. 50, was likewise ordered to be made absolute; and a new rule was made for his shewing cause why an attachment should not issue against him for the publication of No. 51 of the said paper, which made its appearance on Wednesday.

In consequence of the above rules being made absolute, we are informed the parties are to find bail for their appearance at an appointed time before the clerk of the crown, to answer such interrogatories as shall be put to them.

It is now said, that a neighbouring kingdom would not have been required to augment its military force at this time, had it not been for some profound politicians who were of opinion that the people were so transported with joy on a late favourite law, with which they were inveigled, that out of gratitude they would have agreed to almost any thing, but herein the said politicians found themselves greatly deceived, their schemes having proved totally abortive.

On Wednesday Mr. Brett, and Mrs. Landford, publishers in the Strand, gave in bail, themselves in 100l. each, and two securities in 50l. each, for their appearance in the court of King's-Bench the last day of term, for selling the North Briton, No. 50.

June 14. Sunday the Earl of Bute came to town from his seat at Luton-Hoo in Bedfordshire.

On Thursday last, No. 51, of the North Briton was read by Mr. Barlow, clerk of the crown office, in the court of King's-bench; and his Majesty's attorney-general moved the court for a rule to shew cause why an attachment should not issue against Mr. Bingley for publishing the said paper, which was allowed. On Friday the rule granted against him for the publication of No. 50 was made absolute; and on Saturday the rule against No. 51 was also made absolute, and the attachment issued accordingly. It was reported on Friday and Saturday morning, that Mr. Bingley had absconded; but on the contrary, as soon as he was informed the second rule was made absolute, he sent to Mr. Francis, solicitor of the treasury, and to several of the sheriff's officers, to come and serve it upon him, which was done about six o'clock on Saturday evening. He was conveyed in a coach to Mr. Phillip's lock-up-house the Pyed Bull, in Gray's-inn-lane, where he remained that night; and on Sunday in the evening was removed to Newgate, having refused to put in bail on proceedings by attachment.

Yesterday at two large meetings of freeholders at Brentford, for the county of Middlesex, they unanimously agreed to support the nomination of Mr. Serjeant Glynn, at their own private expences.

June 17. A few weeks since a noble Lord sent a card to a gentleman (who formerly was a schoolfellow) requesting his company on a certain day at his Lordship's house: When the gentleman arrived, after discoursing on the common topics of the day, his Lordship began to enter on the occasion of his message: I am, says he, informed that you got Mr. Wilkes forty-one votes at his late election at Brentford, but hope, for my sake, it is not true, as I should be very sorry to know that any of my friends voted for a person of Mr. Wilkes's principles. The gentleman, after thanking his Lordship for his candid opinion, replied, It is not true on my honour,—I did not get Mr. Wilkes six votes; but I do assure your Lordship, I and my friends made up 741 single votes for Mr. Wilkes; and as I am in Middlesex, on any future occasion, will get 800 without one syllable evidence to Mr. Wilkes.

June 18. About eight this morning Mr. Wilkes was brought up to the court of King's-Bench. Lord Mansfield and the other three Judges took their seats before nine. Mr. Justice Yates harangued on the two affidavits; but took no notice of Mr. Kearsley's affidavit, setting forth, that the letters produced on the trial of the Essay on Women, by which Mr. Wilkes was convicted, were taken from Mr. Kearsley by force under the authority of an illegal General Warrant. Nor did Mr. Justice Yates dwell on the publication of the Poem; but only on the nature and tendency of it. He then passed the following sentence:——That Mr. Wilkes be imprisoned Twenty-two Calendar Months from this day: That he pay a fine of One Thousand Pounds; and give security for his future good behaviour for seven years; himself in 4 bonds for One Thousand Pounds, and two sureties in bonds of Five Hundred Pounds each.

Mr. Wilkes himself then moved for a Writ of Error to the House of Lords; and said, that from the wisdom and justice of that court he hoped that the alteration of the Records by Lord Chief Justice Mansfield, at his own house, might be put in such a form as to come by way of appeal, before the House of Lords. Lord Mansfield replied, that they could not alter the Law. Mr. Wilkes repeated his request, that so important a point might be brought before a superior Court, and received the same answer from Lord Mansfield, that they could not alter the L-A-W.

This day a man in the court of King's-Bench cried out Judice. He was immediately ordered to be taken into custody for an insult on the court.

It has been remark'd by many thinking persons, as a great inconsistancy in Mr. W——s's enemies, that they incessantly charge him with availing himself of the prejudices of the people (whom they politely call the mob) against a S——h Favourite and his measures, tho' they have at the same time left no stone unturn'd to avail themselves of the prejudices of the people in religious matters, by unjustly representing Mr. Wilkes as an enemy to all religion.

Next Monday night the following questions will be debated at the Robinhood in Butcher-row, Temple bar: First, "Is courage a moral virtue?" Second, "Is not happiness constitutional?" The reason of the first question not being debated last Monday night, as was intended, was, that the whole time allowed for debate was taken up by the question, "Whether the tyranny of the mob was not worse than that of an arbitrary government?" which was almost unanimously determined in the negative; in support of which, among many other eloquent arguments, it was observed, that the tyranny of the mob never was, nor can be, of long continuance, whereas that of an arbitrary government has no bounds, and may last for ever: Witness the many ages it has subsisted in most parts of the world. There was excellent speaking on the side of Liberty, which triumph'd over the abetters of Slavery and arbitrary Power.

It is said that Mr. Williams's sureties for his good behaviour (given, in consequence of his sentence for re-publishing the North-Briton, No. 45) will have actions commenced against them, on account of his [Mr. W.'s] selling a late paper: This circumstance, if true, will settle a very momentous point, not yet fully ascertained, respecting booksellers and publishers giving bail for their good behaviour; namely, whether giving security for good behaviour adverts only to those works that they are original publishers of, or extends to those pieces of which others are the original publishers, and they only the venders in the way of trade.

A correspondent observes, on the rejoicings in all parts of the kingdom on account of the reversal of Mr. Wilkes's outlawry, that either Mr. Wilkes must be esteemed the first of patriots, or the people must be deemed to have lost their senses.

If it be true that the Genoese have engaged to build thirty ships for the service of France, is it not high time that the English had begun to build for the service of Liberty?

The Emperor is exceeding jealous of so powerful a reinforcement to the strength of Prussia, and is using every means that policy can devise, to restore the importance of his august family in the empire, encrease and discipline his army, and engage the affections of the Germanick body; the Austrians hope to find in that young monarch the restorer of the western empire to its antient state of eminence in Europe.

London, June 21. Letters from Paris, dated June 6, say, "We have received advice, that the regiment of Dauphiny, accompanied by the president, and eight counsellors of the parliament of Provence, have taken possession of the town of Avignon in the king's name; that the vice legate and his guards, are fled to Antibes, where they are to embark for Rome; that some detachments of French troops have also occupied the two small towns of Carpentias and Cavaillon, in the county of Venaissin, and that the inhabitants of those places have been summoned to acknowledge the King's government. According to accounts from Italy, there is no doubt that the troops of the King of Naples have also taken possession of Benevento."

A Letter from Galway dated June 9, says,—"We hear from Tuam in this Country, that Yesterday died in the neighbourhood of that Town, Catherine Noon, otherwise Mooney, aged 136 years, who retained her senses till within a few minutes of her death; and that her husband, who died but a few years since, had lived to the age of 128 years, leaving a numerous issue of children, grand children, great grand-children, and great great grand children.

THEY are uſeful in all diſeaſes of the ſtomach and bowels, where there is no formed fever. The inventor wiſhes not to impoſe on the public; let their effects when tried, eſtabliſh their character. If from feaſting or a debauch, from eating too much fruit, or too many vegetables, from too great a variety or quantity of food, or from drinking bad wine, cyder, beer, punch, or ſpirituous liquors of any kind; if from a coſtive habit, a deficiency of bile, tough phlegm, cold or wet feet, too thin cloathing, or too little ſleep; if from any or more of ſuch like cauſes, the ſtomach or bowels are diſordered, one, two, or three of theſe pills, taken at any hour of the day or night, will procure immediate relief, require not the leaſt confinement, and are very uſeful at ſea, by keeping the body regularly open.

They are alſo the beſt phyſick for pale complexions, and at the turn of life; and are of great ſervice in bringing an ill formed gout to a regular fit.

N. B. Nothing procures ſleep ſo readily, or ſo effectually takes off that reſtleſſneſs which ariſes from a ſtomach loaded at night with too much food or drink.
